FALLOUT OF COMEY'S FIRING
Trump escalates war with Comey, hinting taped talks

Comey's temporary replacement McCabe, made clear that he had no intention of briefing Trump on the probe into possible ties between Russia and Trump's campaign

BLOOMBERG
 Washington, May 12

WASHINGTON, DONALD TRUMP took his fight with the FBI to a new level, raising the spectre on Friday that he may have taped his conversations with director James Comey before firing him.

"James Comey better hope that there are no 'tapes' of our conversations before he starts talking to the press," Trump tweeted. Trump also suggested he may could force press briefings and instead "hand out written responses for the sake of accuracy" because "as a very active President with lots of things happening it is not feasible for my surrogates to stand at podium with perfect accuracy".

The messages followed Trump on Thursday calling Comey a "showboat" and a "grandstander" and insisting the bureau's Russia probe would show he did nothing wrong. He said he'd sent a letter to a top Republican lawmaker declaring he has no business dealings there.

Yet try as he might, Trump cannot escape Russia as congressional probes push ahead and the nation's top law-enforcement agency shows no sign of backing down in the face of the president's criticism.

Comey's temporary replacement, Andrew McCabe, made clear that he liked and respected Comey but had no intention of briefing Trump on the investigation into possible ties between Russia and Trump's campaign as long as he held the job and considered it one of the most important probes underway at the Justice Department.

McCabe, 21-year veteran of the bureau, made an effort during a Senate testimony on Thursday to dispute White House assertions that his former boss had lost trust of FBI rank-and-file.

"Director Comey enjoyed broad support in the FBI and still does to this day," McCabe said on Thursday before the Senate Intelligence Committee. He said that working with Comey was "the greatest privilege and honor of my professional life".

Trump seemed to acknowledge the Russia probe might touch people close to him, taking pains to point out in an interview with NBC News that Comey assured him three times he's not in trouble — but offered no such assurance regarding others in his campaign.

"I know that I'm not under investigation. Me. Personally," Trump told NBC's Lester Holt.

"I'm not talking about anything else," he went on to say that he had sent a letter to Republican Senator Lindsey Graham, certifying that he had no business interests in Russia: "I have no investments in Russia, none whatsoever."

The clash between the president and the nation's premier law-enforcement agency continued a week of high drama in Washington.

NASA study warns against putting crew on huge rocket's first flight

BLOOMBERG
 Dallas, May 12

A NASA WORKING group has concluded after a two-month review that sending astronauts on the first flight of its massive new rocket wouldn't be feasible due to the immense costs of safely accommodating a crew on the planned 2019 mission, the first step in America's return to human space exploration.

The Trump administration has expressed a desire to quickly restart the manned spaceflight programme. But with rare exception, NASA tests rockets first without astronauts, given the huge risks associated with space vehicles.

Rockets in the early years of space flight were unreliable in test phases and sometimes blew up on the pad or shortly after liftoff. Even today, such disasters occasionally strike private rocket firms such as Orbital ATK and SpaceX. Despite tremendous advances, rocket science retains its reputation as a notoriously risky endeavour.

NASA's acting administrator, Robert Lightfoot Jr., requested the study in mid-February. The group determined relatively quickly that changing the existing strategy would likely cost several hundred million dollars and divert schedules for the Space Launch System (SLS) rocket and new Orion Multi-Purpose Crew Vehicle, according to a person familiar with the study.

The group's consensus hasn't been formally announced, and NASA's decision or that of President Donald Trump — on whether to add crew to the SLS's first flight could disregard the findings, said the person, who requested anonymity because they weren't authorised to discuss NASA's internal review. If so, a White House request for additional NASA funding in 2018 would need to be made relatively quickly.

NASA officials declined to comment on the findings or when an announcement would be made.

"Any time you are trying to ramp up capabilities, you are asking for trouble in a system like this," said Casey Dreier, director of space policy at the Planetary Society, which lobbies for greater funding of space science and exploration. "Changing the plans in mid-stream is where you start to incur cost that is not commensurate with your return."

"You're working with these massive programmes that are spread out and integrated over multiple centres and supply chains," Dreier said. "Changing that just throws things into chaos."

The SLS programme is the centrepiece of NASA's effort to send humans into the solar system, starting with the first manned mission beyond Earth orbit in a half century. The Space Launch System is the largest rocket in NASA history, similar in size to the Saturn V rockets used in the Apollo program but offering far greater thrust and the benefits of SLS, which was initially scheduled to fly last year.

Kushner Cos backs out of Chinese investor events

NEW YORK TIMES
 Beijing, May 12

THE REAL ESTATE company owned by the family of Jared Kushner, a senior adviser to President Trump, said on Friday that its leaders would not take part in sales pitches to Chinese investors this weekend.

Executives from Kushner Companies, including Nicole Meyer, Kushner's sister, were expected to appear in the southern cities of Shenzhen and Guangzhou, according to ads for the events.

The company is seeking $150 million in financing for a New Jersey housing development through a programme that gives foreigners who invest at least $500,000 in the programme, which allows permanent residence in the United States.

But the effort to raise money in China drew widespread criticism, with ethics experts saying it presented a conflict of interest.

Kushner continues to benefit from a stake in his family's real estate business and other investments, worth as much as $600 million.

On Friday, Risa R. Heller, a spokeswoman for Kushner Companies, said its executives would not participate in the roadshow after taking part in meetings in Beijing and Shanghai last weekend.

"No one from Kushner Companies will be in China this weekend," she said in a statement, which was earlier reported by The Washington Post.
