Indian hockey coach is sacked. An argument with HI president Narinder Batra is believed to be the reason for the ouster of Paul van Ass

Gaurav Kalra

Earlier this year, just weeks after being appointed India's national coach, Paul van Ass gushed about being an admirer of Indian hockey since he was a 10-year old. In an interview with The Economic Times he said enthusiastically, "We should play the Indian way, a skillful and attractive brand of hockey.'

Six months later van Ass' vision lies in tatters as he joins an assembly line of coaches to be unceremoniously axed. Fellow Dutchman Roelant Oltmans, Indian hockey's High Performance Director, sent him an email saying Hockey India chief Narinder Batra had asked for him to be sacked. "Don't ask me anything, ask Hockey India," van Ass told PTI from the Netherlands. "I did not step aside. I was asked to go.

While the Sports Authority of India (SAI), who contractually engage the Indian coach didn't immediately confirm the sacking, it is quite clear that the relationship between van Ass and

HI is ruptured beyond repair.
The sequence of events that led to his removal may seem bizarre to an outsider, but for followers of Indian hockey, they come as no surprise. After India's narrow win over Malaysia in the quarterfinals at the recent World League semifinals in Belgium, Batra apparently stomped onto the field, demanding the players improve their performances.

A miffed van Ass is believed to have told the Hockey India chief that as coach, he was the only one with the authority to speak with the players on the field. This is said to have incensed Batra, who clearly raging at his authority being questioned, told the coach his behaviour was "unac-ceptable." The die had been cast.

After that, van Ass didn't meet the deadline to file his mandatory posttournament report after India's exit in the semifinals. Rumours started to swirl that his stint was over when he failed to show up for a training camp at the SAI centre in Shilaroo, Himachal Pradesh. An undaunted Batra said, "There is nothing to worry as I have back-up.

Quite clearly, Batra's "despotic" at-titude, as an observer close to the developments described it, has led to the situation coming to a head. Any fair reading of the facts would suggest van ss was well within his rights as coach to prohibit an administrator, irrespective of his seniority, to engage with the players on the field of play. The boundaries in international sport are clearly demarcated-coaches coach, administrators administer. It is a distinction that appears to be lost on Batra.

Van Ass is only the latest victim of a stream of coaches come and go in recent years. After guiding India to their first Asian Games gold since 1998 last year that also seized an Olympic berth, Australian Terry Walsh was shown the door. Before him another Australian Michael Nobbs and Spaniard Jose Brasa had also been booted out with similar impunity.

With less than a year to go for the Rio Olympics, these repeated changes at the helm have

The SAI, who contractually engage the Indian coach didn't immediately confirm the sacking rattled the players. Understandably, fearful of the fallout, none were willing to speak on record. "It takes time to understand and then adapt to a coach's style. So, if the chief coach is changed frequently every other day it is bound to affect our performance," a senior member of the national team told PTI. The Olympics is just a year away and this sort of uncertainty is only going to hamper our preparation.

In fact, the tournament in Belgium was an eye opener that the coach faced a huge challenge for India to be even counted among the medal contenders at Rio. The team suffered heavy defeats to Australia, Belgium and Great Britain, a grim reminder that the elite in world hockey are frighteningly superior.

A TV campaign before they left Indian shores that ironically included van Ass as one of the stars had created a heart-warming buzz for Indian hockey. Alas, the all too familiar headlines are back. As that tiring cliché goes, the more things change, the more they remain the same
