MANAGEMENT DISCUSSION AND ANALYSIS

BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT

Smart Meters:

The implementation of smart meters is advantageous for governments trying to achieve the objectives of emission reductions, security of energy supply, reducing carbon footprint of the country, and providing quality service to the end-user. Governments want to accentuate the installation of smart meters as they foresee better management and efficient usage of energy, which will subsequently foster competition. Some countries in Europe such as Italy, Sweden, and France have opted for rapid deployment of the technology, owing to the European Union directives for energy end-use efficiency by 2020.

Furthermore, growth in smart grid technologies has given rise to smart meters. Smart meters need to be installed in conjunction with some type of a communication infrastructure to get the data back to the utility. Smart grid technologies include communication networks, advanced sensors, and monitoring devices, which form the foundation for utilities to generate and deliver power, and for consumers to understand and control their electricity consumption.

Smart meters are mostly seen in residential applications; its installation in residential places helps to reduce CO₂ emissions globally, as consumer's inclination towards peak time energy saving would increase and the need to supplement extra energy supply at peak time by switching on fossil fuel plants (which are high CO₂ emitters) reduce.

Development of an integrated, information technology (IT)-enabled, national electric power grid offers significant benefits for any country. Such a "smart grid" supports the expansion of distributed, often renewable, electricity production; lowers costs; promotes energy efficiency; and improves both the reliability and security of the entire production, transmission, and distribution system. Smart electricity meters, with either one- or two-way electronic communication capabilities, are an important part of such a system, as they provide system operators an IT-enabled interface with residential and commercial consumers as well as with power generators, who are also increasingly producers of distributed electricity.

The use of such smart meters has been growing quickly in recent years. In fact, certain market observers estimate the global market for smart meters will rise from $4 billion in 2011 to approximately $20 billion in 2018. Government policy mandates and fiscal incentives have been the primary drivers of demand for smart electricity meters in a multitude of markets, and tend to attract manufacturers that are seeking to expand their global presence.

INDUSTRY STRUCTURE AND DEVELOPMENTS

Governments typically have been the principal drivers of growth in the global market for smart meters through mandated use and incentives. According to one industry assessment of global smart grid projects, government investment propelled nearly all of the initiatives identified across Europe and in seven individual countries. Once installed, smart meter technology usually results in savings for both utilities and consumers, but most utilities are reluctant to invest in the new technology without a government mandate or incentive to do so. Utilities tend to have limited budgets for capital expenditures, and smart meters are among many competing demands for those resources. Further, utilities do not realize the benefits from smart meter installation for several years, making the investment less attractive in the absence of government incentives.

Several countries have enacted legislation mandating adoption of smart meters as part of broader clean energy initiatives. In 2008, for example, the United Kingdom mandated that 53 million smart electric and gas meters be deployed in homes and businesses by 2019, though that deadline was recently extended to 2020 in order to accommodate technological challenges. The program is valued at £12.1 billion ($19.5 billion) and has attracted the interest of a wide range of multinational smart meter manufacturers. Further, the European Union (EU) has enacted a mandate that requires utilities in all of its member states to provide smart meters to 80 percent of their electricity consumers by 2020. This will create substantial new markets for both domestic and foreign suppliers. It is estimated that the market for smart meters in Central and Eastern Europe alone will reach $10.3 billion by 2023. In China, the government released its smart grid plan (Special Planning of 12th Five-Year Plan (2011–15) on Smart Grid Major Science and Technology Industrialization Projects) in May 2012, calling for massive investment in smart grid technology. As part of the plan, the State Grid Corporation of China announced that it would deploy 300 million smart meters by 2015 and up to 380 million meters by 2020.

Direct government funding of smart meter adoption has been more common than legislative mandates. In the United States, for example, the 2009 American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) funds specifically earmarked for smart grid development played a significant role in the growth of the domestic market. France has announced a program that would channel $15 billion into digital infrastructure with an allocation for smart meters. The plan calls for the installation of 3 million smart meters by 2016 through the national utility, Électricité de France (EDF), scaling up to 35 million meters by 2020.

STRATEGIC INITIATIVE

PML supplies components for Smart meters. PML plans to increase manufacturing of products used in Smart meters to grow revenue.

PML is developing products for applications like Automotive, Earth Leakage Circuit breakers etc. These products will provide a diversity to the product line.

PML has started supplying parts for Electric Cars.

OPPORTUNITIES & CHALLENGES

Substantial increase in the worldwide installation of Smart meters presents a huge opportunity for PML. The challenge is to develop the products quickly.

Increase in the sales of electric cars in USA is a promising growth driver.

New applications like Nickel Alloys, copper based welded parts, battery shunts, Brass parts presents good opportunities for growth for the company.
