Industry Structure and Development

In the music industry, a record label is a brand and a trademark associated with the marketing of music recordings and music videos. Most commonly, a record label is the company that manages such brands and trademarks, coordinates the production, manufacture, distribution, marketing and promotion, and enforcement of copyright protection of sound recordings and music videos; conducts talent scouting and development of new artists ("artists and repertoire" or A&R); and maintains contracts with recording artists and their managers.

Within the music industry, most of recording artists have been increasingly reliant upon record labels to broaden their audience, market their albums, and be both promoted and heard on radio, television, with publicists that assist performers in positive media reports to market their merchandise, and make it available via stores and other media outlets. The Internet has increasingly been a way that some artists avoid costs and gain new audiences, as well as the use of videos in some cases, to sell their products.

With the Internet now being a viable source for obtaining music, netlabels have emerged. Depending on the ideals of the net label, music files from the artists may be downloaded free of charge or for a fee that is paid via Paypal or an online payment system. Some of these labels also offer hard copy CDs in addition to direct download. Most net labels acknowledge the Creative Commons licensing system thus reserving certain rights for the artist. Digital Labels are the latest version of a 'net' label. Whereas 'net' labels were started as a free site or just a hobby point, digital labels seek to give the major record industry a real run for their money.

Opportunities & Threats

Broadband access is now starting to lead to innovative creation and use of content and stimulating the rise of new technologies in PC and consumer electronics. These trends have led to the rapid creation of online music services. Unauthorized sharing of copyrighted works and new commercial digital delivery possibilities have thus far been a disruptive technology for the music industry. Still, the outlook for the music market in 2005 is positive due to rapidly increasing sales of (mobile) digital music services. Digital music is also a driver for the global technology markets. Furthermore, the new digital music value chain produces an array of new digital intermediaries (e.g., digital rights management DRM). Finally, the availability of online technologies opens up possibilities for content created by network users. Music is thus an area in which the transformative impact of digital distribution, file-sharing and new online business models is strong for both the supply side (artists and the music industry) and on the demand side (new music lifestyles, users as content creators).

However, business and policy challenges analyzed in the study need to be addressed if the full potential of online music distribution is to be reached. In sum, regulatory frameworks which balance the interests of suppliers and users, in areas such as the protection of intellectual property rights, and digital rights management, without disadvantaging innovative e-business models are called for.

- A key requisite for the creation of efficient online music delivery is a competitive and widespread access to broadband infrastructure. The delivery of online content also necessitates new technologies and an environment that facilitates the creation, acquisition, management and delivery of content. Effective and secure (micro)-payment systems are needed.
- Alliances between content providers, broadband and technology providers that come up with new business models play a critical role in driving the adoption of licensed content services.
- A diversity of interoperable content, standards and hardware are likely to prove most beneficial to efficient online content markets. With vertical integration, lock-in of consumers to certain standards, and difficult access to certain content, an environment where small and innovative players can compete should be maintained.
- The OECD notes the importance of government actions to take steps to address online piracy. Around one third of Internet users in OECD countries have downloaded files from P2P networks. While, in principle, file-sharing software is a new and innovative technology, piracy is an important impediment to legitimate online content services. The most important is to find equilibrium of available legitimate and innovative uses of new technologies and the necessary protection of associated intellectual property rights (i.e. copyrights).
- The Internet already provides new forms of advertising at lower cost, lower barriers to entry for artistic creation and lower costs of finding new talent. However, the effects of authorised and unauthorised file-sharing and digital music services with pay-per track offers on artists and the music supply are not yet obvious and need further study.

Bengali, Rajasthani, Hindi etc. on various Television Channels for a price of Rs. 50 Lac per Annum, for the period of 3 Years.

Ltd., owners of famous "Shemaroo" brand, to use its recorded songs in various languages viz.
