Appendix A

Determination of Ordinary Course of Business

Background:

Section 188(1) of the Companies Act states that a company shall not enter into any contract or arrangement, as specified therein, with a related party which is not in the ordinary course of business and which is not at arm's length, without the consent of the board of directors given by a resolution at the meeting of the board of directors. In case the Company has a paid-up share capital exceeding the amount as may be prescribed or the value of the specified transaction exceeds the prescribed thresholds under the Companies Act read with the rules, it will also be put up for prior approval of the shareholders through special resolutions.

So, for transactions meeting both the criteria in the fourth proviso to section 188(1) of the Companies Act, viz. transactions that are entered in the Ordinary course of business and amount to an Arms' Length Transaction, the provisions of Section 188(1) of the Companies Act would not apply.

Whilst the framework policy defined by us defines an Arm's Length Transaction, the Policy does not articulate what would be deemed as ordinary course of business for the Company.

What is Ordinary course of Business?

The phrase 'ordinary course of business' is not defined under the Companies Act or the rules prescribed thereunder. An assessment of whether a transaction is in 'ordinary course of business' may be very subjective, judgmental and can vary on case-to-case basis. The purpose of making such assessment is to determine whether the transaction is usual or customary to the Company and / or its line of business.

The Company would, therefore, be required to exercise its judgment to conclude whether a transaction which the Company enters into can be considered to be in the ordinary course of its business.

For example, a car manufacturing company selling car to its group company would easily be deemed as a transaction that has been entered into by the company in its ordinary course of business.

Transactions that may be considered outside a company's normal course of business:

International Standard on Auditing ("ISA") 550- 'Related Parties' has listed certain illustrative (not exhaustive) examples of the same:

- a. Complex equity transaction, such as corporate restructurings or acquisitions.
- b. Transactions with offshore entities in jurisdictions with weak corporate laws
- c. The leasing of premises or the rendering of management services by the entity to another party if no consideration is exchanged;
- d. Transactions with circular arrangements, for example, sales with a commitment to repurchase;
- e. Transactions under contracts whose terms are changed before expiry.

Tests for determining whether a contract/ activity falls within the ordinary course of business:

The courts have inter alia laid down the following principles in this regard:

- a. the objects of the company permit such activity;
- b. it is a historical practice and there is a pattern of frequency (and not an isolated transaction);

- c. it has a connection with the normal business carried on by the company;
- d. the income, if any, earned from such activity/transaction is assessed as business income in the company's books of accounts and hence, is a 'business activity'; and
- e. It is a common commercial practice.

Key factors which the management of the Company may consider in making its assessment for ordinary course of business of the Company:

i. Whether the transaction is covered in its Memorandum of Association:

If the transaction is covered in the objects clause of the Memorandum of Association (MOA) then it is likely to be in ordinary course of business of the company.

ii. Whether a transaction is usual or unusual:

Although a Company would be outsourcing its IT processes for the first time, if that is a norm in the industry in which it operates the transaction is not unusual. Hence, whilst deciding the usualness or otherwise of a transaction, one should not restrict oneself only to the company and its past history; rather, a wider perspective covering line of business.

iii. Frequency:

If a transaction occurs frequently over a period of time, the more likely it is to be an ordinary part of the business. However, the inverse of this does not necessarily hold true.

iv. Business purpose of the transaction and whether transaction is done on similar basis with other third parties:

The Company would consider transactions to be in the ordinary course of business which include those that form part of the Revenue from Operations, the costs of goods sold, and the normal expenses incurred for operating the business uninterruptedly or part of capital asset like replacement / maintenance of fixed assets (considering the business rationale and without any complicated terms and conditions as compared to transactions with independent third parties)

A transaction proposed to be disclosed as part of other income or other expenses, exceptional or extraordinary may generally be assessed on a case to case basis as to whether they could be considered to be in the ordinary course of business.

v. Size and volume of transaction.

The materiality of the transaction in terms of its value may be considered.
