TRUMP-XI FIGHT

Both make big bets that may backfire

PETER MARTIN, SHAWN DONNAN & KEVIN HAMLIN
Washington/Beijing

WHEN XI JINPING first met Donald Trump back in 2017, the Chinese leader said they had "a thousand reasons to make the China-US relationship a success, and not a single reason to break it."

Two years on, ties are at their lowest point in decades — and they appear to be worsening by the day. Trump's threat to raise tariffs on all Chinese goods last week shattered a truce reached with Xi just weeks earlier, unleashing tit-for-tat actions on trade and currency policy that risk accelerating a wider geopolitical fight between the world's biggest economies.

A big part of the problem is that neither leader believes the other is serious about making a deal: China sees Trump as posturing ahead of the 2020 election, while US officials think Xi is looking to wait him out for a better deal. Either way, the political space for compromise is diminishing as hardliners take centre stage, prompting investors to weigh the potential economic fallout.

"We are looking at a situation now that is a bit of a perfect storm," said Dennis Wilder, former senior director for Asia on the National Security Council who is now at Georgetown University. "Both have a great deal to lose in this high-stakes poker."

For Trump, the bet is that a hard-line stance on China will help him win another four years in the Oval Office. His administration has proudly trumpeted what it calls the most robust response in decades to a rising

China, and most Democratic candidates agree with the need to stay tough on Beijing even if they don't agree with Trump's tariffs.

While US farmer and business groups have sounded the alarm over his latest escalation of trade tensions, the Federal Reserve's interest-rate cut last week — and the possibility of more to come — may give Trump some breathing space. And the president tweeted on Tuesday that he'd support a fresh round of aid to farmers hurt by tariff increases, if necessary.

The political calculations for Xi are harder to grasp, given the secretive nature of the Communist Party. But analysts say he's under pressure from senior leaders currently meeting in the seaside town of Tiedaihe to get together as US ties deteriorate, corporate giant Huawei Technologies comes under attack and protests in Hong Kong spiral out of control.

China's move on Monday to let the currency weaken past 7 yuan to the dollar and halt agricultural purchases marked a stark escalation in its response to Trump, which had been restrained for months. His administration labeled Beijing a currency manipulator in return.

"It is unlikely China will buckle to any further pressure as they are convinced dealing with the current US administration means give them an inch and they want a foot," said Charles Liu, a former economic negotiator with the Chinese delegation at the United Nations and founder of Hao Capital. "There does not seem to be serious interest from the US side of actually wanting to do a deal."

The US has a much different version of events. People within the administration blame China's own efforts for scuttling key parts of a trade agreement in May, and say Xi failed to live up to promises to step up agriculture purchases after the leader met most two weeks ago at the Group of 20 summit in Japan. —BLOOMBERG

UK MPs divided over Article 370 revocation

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
London, August 6

THE UK GOVERNMENT on Tuesday said it was monitoring the situation in Kashmir closely and called for calm as the country's parliamentarians echoed some of the wider divisions over the India's decision to revoke Article 370 and bifurcate the state of Jammu and Kashmir.

The government of India on Monday revoked Article 370, which gave special status to Jammu and Kashmir and proposed that the state be bifurcated into two union territories, J&K, and Ladakh.

"We are following developments closely and support calls for the situation to remain calm," said a Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) spokesperson, in reference to the issue which has led British MPs to express both "grave concern" and "strong support".

The chair of Britain's All Party Parliamentary Group (APPG) on Kashmir has written to UK foreign secretary Dominic Raab to flag the human rights concerns and ask if the UK will be raising the issue at the next UN Security Council in September. "We are gravely concerned at the announcement by Indian home minister Amit Shah that Article 370 of the Indian Constitution, which grants special status to Jammu and Kashmir, has been removed by Presidential Order," Debbie Abrahams, an Opposition Labour Party MP and chair of the APPG on Kashmir, notes in her letter to the FCO minister. "The unilateral decision made by the Indian government to remove Article 370 betrays the trust of the people of Jammu and Kashmir, dating back to the accession of 1947, and threatens to escalate tensions in the region even further. It also contravenes international law," she said, calling on the senior minister to urgently inform Britain's MPs of the representations being made by the UK on the issue.

Abrahams also issued a letter to the Indian High Commissioner to the UK Ruchi Ghanashyam, calling for a meeting to discuss the position of the Indian government even as she drew parallels with the UK's own devolved government with regions such as Scotland.

She called for a "moratorium" to allow the citizens affected by the action to have their say and asked that international observers be sent to the region. The cross-party APPG on Kashmir, which claims to be made up of MPs and peers of both Indian and Pakistani heritage, was created to support the "right to self-determination of the Kashmiri people through dialogue" and campaigns for a process of peace and reconciliation in Kashmir on both sides of the LoC.

Nobel laureate Toni Morrison dead at 88

ASSOCIATED PRESS
New York, August 6

NOBEL LAUREATE TONI Morrison, a pioneer and reigning giant of modern literature whose imaginative power in Beloved, Song of Solomon and other works transformed American letters by dramatising the pursuit of freedom within the boundaries of race, has died at age 88.

Publisher Alfred A Knopf announced that Morrison died on Monday night at Montefiore Medical Center in New York. Morrison's family issued a statement through Knopf saying she died after a brief illness.

"Toni Morrison passed away peacefully last night surrounded by family and friends," the family announced. "She was an extremely devoted mother, grandmother, and aunt who revelled in being with her family and friends. The consummate writer who treasured the written word, whether her own, her students or others, she read voraciously and was most at home when writing."

Few authors rose in such rapid, spectacular style as she nearly 40 when her first novel, The Bluest Eye, was published. By her early 60s, after just six novels, she had become the first black woman to receive the Nobel literature prize, praised in 1993 by the Swedish academy for her "visionary force" and for her delving into "language itself, a language she wants to liberate" from categories of black and white. In 2019, she was featured in an acclaimed documentary, Toni Morrison: The Pieces I Am.

Morrison helped raise American multiculturalism to the world stage and helped uncensor her country's past, unearthing the lives of the unknown and the unwanted, those she would call "the unfree at the heart of the democratic experiment." In her novels, history — black history — was a trove of poetry, tragedy, love, adventure and good old gossip, whether in small-town Ohio in Sula or big-city Harlem in Jazz.

She regarded race as a social construct and through language founded the better world her characters suffered to attain. Morrison wove everything from African literature and slave folklore to the Bible and Gabriel Garcia Marquez into the most diverse, yet harmonious, of literary communities.

"Narrative has never been merely entertainment for me," she said in her Nobel lecture.

"It is, I believe, one of the principal ways in which we absorb knowledge." Winner of the 1988 Pulitzer Prize for Beloved, she was one of the world's most regal presences, with her expanse of graying braids; her dark, discerning eyes; and warm, theatrical voice, able to lower herself to a mysterious growl or rise to a humorous falsetto. "That handsome and perceptive lady," James Baldwin called her.

Her admirers were countless — from fellow authors, college students and working people to Barack Obama, who awarded her a Presidential Medal of Freedom; to Oprah Winfrey, who idolised Morrison and helped greatly expand her readership. Morrison shared those high opinions, repeatedly labelling one of her novels, Love, as "perfect" and rejecting the idea that artistic achievement called for quiet acceptance.

"Maya Angelou helped me without her knowing it," Morrison told The Associated Press during a 1998 interview. "When she was writing her first book, I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings, I was an editor at Random House. She was having such a good time, and she never said, 'Who me? My little book?'"

"I decided that...winning the (Nobel) prize was fabulous," Morrison added. "Nobody was going to take that and make it into something else. I felt representational. I felt American. I felt Ohioan. I felt blacker than ever. I felt more woman than ever. I felt all of that, and put all of that together and went out and had a good time."

Privacy watchdogs warn FB over Libra currency

Sydney, August 6

GLOBAL PRIVACY REGULATORS joined forces on Tuesday to demand guarantees from Facebook on how it will protect users' financial data when it launches its planned cryptocurrency, Libra.

The watchdogs from Australia, the US, EU, Britain, Canada and other countries issued an open letter calling on Facebook to respond to more than a dozen concerns over how it will handle sensitive personal information of users of the digital currency. The letter follows a series of warnings about Facebook's entry into the shadowy world of digital banking, including at a meeting last month of finance ministers and central bankers from the G7 group of most developed economies. —AGENCIES
