Via mangroves and schools, Apple touching lives in India

BIJIN JOSE & NANDAGOPAL RAJAN
Mumbai/Jaipur/New Delhi
January 4

RIGHT IN THE heart of Mumbai, nestled between towering structures, is the 'Red Building' where a quiet revolution is being powered by a little bit of tech and a lot of perseverance. At the Sitaram Mill Compound Mumbai Public School, a 30-minute drive from the Bandra Kurla Complex, a bunch of underprivileged children are rewriting their futures, armed with iPads.

The bright, sunny day makes the red-painted school stand out even more, and what adds to its ambience is students having fun recording each other on iPads, creating content as part of their curriculum. "How can we combat pollution, when our surroundings are not clean?" asked Antara, a grade 8 student, who was part of the classroom project where each group, called a station, was allowed a topic on pollution. They were required to create videos, posters, and brief presentations on the topic. But for the students it is beyond a classroom project, as this gives them an opportunity to share their perspectives on an issue that is pervasive in their everyday lives.

"It took me less than 15 minutes to source images from the Internet, make a collage, and create a poster as part of my project. My team partner and I made it using the Keynote app," explained an eager Rani, another eighth grader who believes technology has the ability to fulfil the dreams and aspirations of millions of students like her.

Drishiti of grade 1 is just mirroring her project on verbs from the iPad to the bigger display in the classroom. But her glee at getting to do something like this is apparent, also to show off their prowess with their favourite app, Book Creator, which helps them learn everything from English to

Maths. "When it comes to training children in grade 1, we start with the camera, how to record a video and use the markup annotation after they click a picture. Then we move to Book Creator for their projects, design, and videos," explained her teacher Ruchika Patel.

Today, most schools in India, especially the IB Boards, have included technologies such as iPads and notebooks in their teaching methodology. While this has given students from recognised schools an edge over their peers from schools in socially backward quarters, it has also widened the gap between the educational and learning abilities among them. Akanksha Foundation, a non-profit organisation, that was set up in 1991 as an after-school centre has been working towards bridging this gap. In 2014, the organisation partnered with Apple to integrate technological support in their schools across Mumbai and Pune. At Sitaram Mill Compound School, iPads are introduced to students right from kindergarten. While they start with relatively simple applications such as the Book Creator, they move on to more applications as they progress through grades. "Each day, these students look forward to classes, especially to learn more about the apps that are making learning a fun experience," added Patel, who highlighted the fact that they usually don't have access to any gadgets at their homes.

Principal Mandira Purohit recounted how after the partnership with Apple, a core team of teachers underwent extensive training that laid the groundwork for integrating iPads into the curriculum. The initiative was not just about providing access to technology, she asserted, but also about empowering teachers and students to use it effectively.

"We have a long history of working in education and we believe very strongly in how transformative our projects can be. So if we are going to be engaged in an education project, it is going to involve not only our hardware but also the tools, we develop the curricula and approach to what we call challenge-based learning," Lisa Jackson, Apple's vice president of Environment, Policy and Social Initiatives, told indianexpress.com in an interview. Students can learn from working on a problem as much as they can sometimes learn by being lectured to, she said, adding this is why Apple's educational projects are going to be centered around the way we approach education, and that's hardware and software and also teacher education."

Making the community custodians of mangrove preservation

The cracks and fissures of climate change are glaringly evident now more than ever. "The turning point was the Nisarga cyclone, which had led to a landfall in Raigad," said Jayant Sarnaik, the joint-director of Applied Environmental Research Foundation (AERF), and the 2020 cyclone prompted him to look at mangrove conservation as a potential way to mitigate the perils of climate change.

AERF is a conservation non-profit based in Pune and it has been working toward saving biodiversity in the global biodiversity hotspots.

More recently, AERF shifted its focus to protecting mangrove forests along Maharashtra's coastline that act as a vital buffer against intensifying storms. "In 2019, Apple approached us about submitting a proposal. They were impressed by our forest conservation work and wanted to explore collaboration," he said. This led AERF to consider mangrove conservation, especially after seeing the devastating impacts of cyclones on coastal communities lacking sufficient mangrove buffers.

Shortest Test that India passed

SRIRAM VEERA
Mumbai, January 4

IT WAS A lovely little moment that came at the end of the shortest Test in 90 years in terms of overs bowled. In 107 overs, India had wrapped up a seven-wicket win, adventurously chasing down 79-run target, when Jasprit Bumrah walked up to the presentation ceremony to translate the man-of-the-match winner Mohammad Siraj's Hindi comments to English for the broadcasters.

That's when Bumrah was confronted with the task of relaying Siraj's rave about him to the world. Siraj had talked about how Bumrah assesses the pitch quickly and passes relevant information to him and all he needs to do is to be consistent with that. Bumrah smiled, paused, and then said those words in English but converted it all as a "we", a group activity rather than take credit, ending with a charming, "And it sometimes helps him (Siraj), even as a smile creased his face.

There were no smiles before the tour but heart-broken emojis from him that had caused a big flutter in Indian cricket. It was interpreted as a reaction to not being given captaincy of Mumbai Indians when the franchise decided to replace Rohit Sharma with Hardik Pandya. There were no smiles even a couple of months prior to that emoji but apprehension in general at how the all-new Bumrah would bowl after a comeback from a lengthy hiatus to injury.

Neither were there any smiles after the last tour of South Africa where he led the team's attack along with Mohammad Shami but couldn't conjure any breakthrough miracles in two Tests, unable to defend a tough 200 plus totals in the last innings. It was batsmen's failure primarily that they couldn't give Bumrah and co. generous totals to defend, but the question does raise, especially after the consistently heroic performances in similar situations by world's best Test bowler Pat Cummins who always finds a way.

Skillful warrior

So, the distant past was smirking, the recent one with

IPL heartbreak was raising eyebrows about his state of mind, but it was Bumrah the skilful warrior that turned up in South Africa to win the man of the series. He had already silenced the injury doubters by spectacular performances in the ODI World Cup and now he had firmly shut up the mouths of those who wondered if his body would be a limited-overs bowler or be as effective as before in Tests. It was as much a triumph of body as it was with the mind and befittingly it came at Cape Town where he had made his Test debut. Circle of life, and all that. Mind and body willing, he had to still rev himself to do the damage with the ball. Even on Thursday, especially as his team had imploded a day before, losing six wickets for nothing. If South Africa had gotten to a 175-run target, who knows what could happen.

Bumrah dealt a first-over blow to South Africa that must have settled the nerves. He quickly sensed the nervy urge of David Bedingham to attack and forced him to hit a nipbacker on the up; one element was threat enough but the combined forces of the seam movement and vertical lift proved too much and it was nicked to the 'keeper.

Late last evening, Bumrah had already produced a pearler, one that kicked up steeply and with force from a length to star- tle Tristan Stubbs into edging. A similar delivery from Curtly Ambrose was good enough to sort out a young Sachin Tendulkar in the 1992 World Cup and this one with even more vicious lift proved too much for poor Stubbs. It would have troubled even the adult Tendulkar.

From that Bedingham moment on, it was classic Bumrah unleashing not just his wizardry but by his well-thought-out set-ups. It would have been easier for him to just keep hitting the length or back of length to extract bounce to harass the South Africans but he mixed his deliveries so expertly that a highlights reel might show as if batsmen needlessly self-destructed and flayed at deliveries. They didn't.

Bag full of tricks

Bumrah would make them claustrophobic with his hard lengths and slip in the fuller wider potentially jail break deliveries and suck them into in judicious drives. It was his version of 'zeher ka peda' - a colloquial term from Mumbai maidans from the past about the over-flighted sucker ball that spinners would bowl, only to fool the batsmen with weighted drops. Marco Jansen hit a full-back to Bumrah, Keshav Maharaj sliced a drive to gully and Lungi Ngidi edged a real full ball that shaped away ever so slightly to slips. In between he had Kyle Verreynne to miscue a pull to mid-on. He nearly would have had South Africa's best batsman on the day Aiden Markram but an regulation chance was grabbed by the wicketkeeper KL Rahul.

Siraj was right. Even in the first innings, Bumrah had led the way, deploying the leg-and-middle line of attack to the left-handers Dean Elgar and Tony de Zorzi. And how to keep it simple to the right-handers on and around the off-stump line.

He sowed doubts, Siraj reaped the rewards in the first innings - and it was a solo show in the second to ensure India didn't have to chase too many.

Jaishankar in book: Quad grouping like 4 sons of Dasharath

DIVYA A
New Delhi, January 4

USING ANALOGIES FROM the Ramayana to explain India's foreign policy, External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar Wednesday compared the role of diplomats to the character of Hanuman, the four Quad countries - India, Japan, Australia and the US - as Dasharath's four sons, and France as an ally, like Lakshman.

"The direct analogy I make for Quad is with the four sons of Dasharath - Ram, Bharat, Lakshman and Shatrughan - who in many ways have conflicting interests," the foreign minister said, adding, "yet, there is something fundamental which brings them together. When they meet, suddenly everything starts to work." Jaishankar was speaking at the launch of his book, Why Bharat Matters, (Rupa Publishers), in New Delhi, where he describes India's foreign policy through the prism of the epic - how Ramayana teaches statecraft, be it diplomacy, handling pressure or the importance of allies.

This is his second book after 'The India Way: Strategies for an Uncertain World', which was released in 2020. In the latest book, he has hit out at Independent India's first Prime Minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, saying China's interests were put ahead of India's when it came to the UN Security Council.
