Consecration ceremony held under strict security cover

During the Pran Pratishtha of Ram Lalla in the newlybuilt temple, Ayodhya was transformed into an impregnable fortress with extensive security arrangements at every corner. Commandos armed with machine guns and AK-47s stood vigilant, overseeing the city's security, while surveillance was enhanced through a network of CCTV cameras and helicopters. The city's borders were sealed and were accessible only to those holding invitations for the Pran Pratishtha and the necessary passes. Commandos and vehicles with blaring sirens patrolled the roads, ensuring strict control over the city as the consecration ceremony continued in the Ram Temple. As many as 60 chartered planes of VVIP guests landed at Avodhva's new airport. After the passengers disembarked, the planes were parked in airports within a 1,000-kilometre range. To accommodate the limited parking capacity in Ayodhya, reserved spaces were conducted around the temple premises using helicopters, allocated at 12 airports in five states – Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, Jharkhand, Madhya Pradesh and Uttarakhand.

From the security standpoint, Ayodhya was divided into 10 zones and 26 sectors. The Ram Mandir, Hanuman Garhi and Sarayu Ghat formed the Super Zone with heightened security protocols. Stringent measures, including crash-rated bollards, undervehicle scanners, tire killers and boom barriers were in place to prevent any suspicious thing from reaching the Ram Temple. Special teams, including the Special Task Force and Anti-Terror Squad commandos, managed and oversaw these security devices. Given that visitors to Avodhva often extend their visit to the Sarayu Ghat and Hanuman Garhi, both areas were included in the Super Zone, protected by a 7-layer security set-up.
