Siachen: For 40 years a battleground

AJAI SHUKLA
New Delhi, 14 April

Forty years ago, on April 13, 1984, a fleet of Indian Air Force (IAF) helicopters flew an Indian Army platoon, one soldier at a time, to the Bilafondla Pass on the Salto Ridge, towering over the Siachen Glacier at an altitude of 5,450 metres (17,880 ft).

HAL has designed and developed a family of light helicopters, powered by the Indo-French Shakti engine and optimised for extremely high altitudes

Led by Captain Sanjay Kulkarni (who retired in 2016 as a lieutenant general), the platoon of hardy Kumaoni soldiers quickly occupied the area around Bilafondla, securing the strategic heights overlooking the Siachen Glacier and sealing off the approaches from Pakistan-Occupied Kashmir (POK) to Ladakh.

Simultaneously, a platoon of Ladakh Scouts was airlifted to Sia La, in the northern glacier, at an altitude of 5,589 metres (18,336 ft). These natural mountain troops were even better acclimatised for high altitude operations, so they were given the higher objective.

Soon, about 300-odd Indian troops were positioned on the strategically important peaks and passes of the Salto Ridge. By the time the Pakistan Army reacted by sending its troops to dislodge them, Indian soldiers had already occupied crucial peaks and passes, snatching an invaluable tactical advantage.

Thus began Operation Meghdoot - India's bold military response to what New Delhi calls Pakistan's "cartographic aggression" in the uncharted territory of Ladakh, north of map reference NJ9842, where New Delhi and Islamabad had agreed the Line of Control (LoC) ran up to.

One of the key figures in the bold Indian decision-making of that time was a colourful mountaineer, Colonel Narendra "Bull" Kumar. Ever ready to set off on an expedition, Bull Kumar discovered in the late 1970s that Pakistan was hosting European mountaineering expeditions on the Salto Ridge, thereby establishing its claim to those ranges.

Persuading the Indian military and mountaineering hierarchy to establish Indian counter-claims, Bull Kumar led a team from the army's High Altitude Warfare School (HAWS) to climb the 23,400 feet-high Teram Kangri II in 1978. "During the expedition, I found signs of German, Japanese, Pakistani and American expeditions. Pakistan had already sent about 50 expeditions," Kumar told before his death in December 2020.

"We began establishing a territorial claim to this area, through mountaineering, to counter Pakistan's cartographic aggression," said Kumar. "My report on the expedition said, 'The Line of Control should run along the Salto Ridge, so that we can overlook and dominate the Pakistanis.'"

"In 1983, the northern command intelligence concluded that Pakistan was preparing to occupy Siachen. When we were shopping for extreme cold mountaineering equipment in Europe, we discovered that the Pakistan Army was doing the same thing. That galvanised us into action," said Kumar.

Dominating the wasteland

Over the decades, the Indian Army painstakingly learnt the game of high-altitude survival and combat. Captain Anil Sengar, who commanded a frontline post in the Northern Glacier in the 1980s described conditions to

"In the 1980s, before the current infrastructure was built, soldiers sometimes didn't have tents to sleep in. They would fabricate makeshift shelters from parachutes and the crates used for airdropping supplies. Kerosene fuel was in short supply, being used in bukharis (iron stoves, with chimneys) to heat up shelters in which everyone, except for sentries, would crowd in to sleep. When the bukhari was put off, the temperature within the shelter would fall below zero in five minutes. And the wind would blow so fiercely that it would find even the smallest tear in the fabric of a shelter and rip it to shreds," said Sengar, who went on to become a major general.

Playing an irreplaceable role in this effort, the IAF's tactical and strategic airlifters - An-12s, An-32s and IL-76s - transported stores and troops and air-dropped supplies to high altitude airfields, from where Mi-17, Mi-8, Chetak and Cheetah helicopters ferried men and material to dizzying heights on the glacier, far above the limits set by the helicopter manufacturers.

"The IAF's incredible performance at the extremes of temperature and altitude remains a continuing saga of fortitude and skill. The IAF's Hunter aircraft kick-started fighter operations from the high altitude airfield at Leh, when a detachment of Hunters from No 27 Squadron commenced operations in September 1984. In the next couple of years, the Hunters flew an impressive total of more than 700 sorties from Leh," stated the MoD on Saturday.

In the highest battlefield in the world, known for its extreme climatic conditions, IAF helicopters form the lifeline and the sole link of Indian troops with the outside world, playing a critical role in continuing the four decade-old military operation; responding to emergencies, supplying essential logistics and evacuating the sick and wounded from the 78 km long glacier. Flying in such of life. An estimated 1,000 Indian soldiers have lost their lives and some 6,000 have been wounded. Large numbers of soldiers have been psychologically scarred.

Casualty evacuation was by helicopter, but the small helicopters that could land on forward posts could only fly out with one casualty; it could not lift even a nursing assistant, or the bedding of the soldier being evacuated.

Home was a remote memory. In the days before posts were equipped with satellite phones, letters were the only way to communicate and those often took 45 days to reach a forward post.

No solution in sight

For many Indians, Siachen is a quixotic contest that occasionally garners world records like the highest battlefield ever or the world's highest helicopter landing. But for Pakistan, especially the Pakistani army, the humiliation of Siachen resonates. Many see Siachen as a violation of the Shimla Accord that says that "neither side shall unilaterally alter the situation", with regard to "any of the problems between the two countries". For Pakistan, Kargil was a justifiable response to Siachen.

Within the Pakistani army Siachen is a military setback with the Indians dominating the glacier from the Salto. Pakistan insists on terming it "the Siachen dispute", although the glacier itself cannot be seen, even from forward Pakistani positions.

But Siachen can no longer be evaluated purely in military-strategic terms. For India, it is a symbol of will and a successful feat of arms. For Pakistan, it is a debacle, something to be wiped off the slate. For India, Siachen is a drain in terms of money and sheer military effort. In Pakistan, it is an oozing sore, draining honour and national pride.

India tends to undervalue its Siachen advantage; this must be evaluated through Pakistani eyes. The enormous cost paid by India to gain the advantage in Siachen must translate into benefits elsewhere. Since the 1999 Kargil conflict, an entire Indian division now mans the LOC in Kargil, occupying areas almost as inhospitable as Siachen. A pullback from Siachen must be matched by a corresponding pullback from Kargil.

Sarabjit's killer shot dead in Pak

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, 14 April

Amir Sarfaraz Tamba, an accused in the murder of Indian death row prisoner in Pakistan Sarabjit Singh and a close associate of LeT founder Hafiz Sayeed, was killed by unidentified gunmen in Lahore on Sunday, official sources said.

Sarabjit Singh's (above) alleged murderer Amir Sarfaraz Tamba was attacked in Lahore by motorcycle-assailants

Tamba was attacked by motorcycle-assailants in the Islampura area of Lahore in Pakistan and was rushed in critical condition to a hospital where he succumbed to his injuries, they said.

Singh, 49, died of cardiac arrest in Jinnah Hospital Lahore on May 2, 2013, after being comatose for nearly a week following a brutal assault by inmates including Tamba, inside the high-security Kot Lakhpat jail. Singh had been allegedly found guilty of taking part in several bombings in Pakistan's Punjab province in 1990 and was given the death penalty.

Gunshots outside Salman's home

Two motorbike-borne unidentified persons opened fire outside Bollywood superstar Salman Khan's house early Sunday morning leading the police to enhance security around his residence and launch a search for the accused, an official said.

The two persons fired four rounds outside the Galaxy Apartments in Mumbai's Bandra area, where the actor resides, at around 5 am and fled from the spot, the police official said.

Security outside Khan's residence was stepped up and the police were collecting footage of the CCTV cameras installed near his house to identify the persons, he said.

Local police, crime branch personnel and a team of forensic experts reached the spot to collect evidence and started a probe into the incident, the official said.
