Youth dies in road accident

Indore: One shriram, resident of a village near depalpur, who had gone to refill his brother's bike following a phone call from his brother was hit by a vehicle on his return. He was critically injured and rushed to the hospital, but he died. The police are investigating the case.

OVERHEARD

All for self-interest

An IAS officer has been trying to draw benefits from the situation arising out of the Covid-19 pandemic. He pays full attention to purchase and to some new projects, that he may wheedle some more gravy out of those schemes. He has recently brought a project for making some dough. The Sahib is also publicising the project, that nobody may ask him any question. He is also pegging away at getting the project implemented across the state. The Sahib has also set up a hospital on partnership basis during the pandemic. The hospital has also raised many controversies, but he set it up with the help of his clout. This officer works for self-interest in any situation, besides that, the Sahib is trying to get a plum post on the pretext of the pandemic. He is, however, lucky, because whenever he is caught in any controversy, he just gets out of it.

Love bug bites

A senior IAS officer is feeling sad, after vacating the government house in the state capital. The officer deputed to Delhi often visited Bhopal. He has stopped doing that since he vacated the house. Covid-19 has also come in the way of his coming to the state capital. The main purpose of his visiting the state capital was to meet his female friend. Despite being deputed to Delhi, he frequently tripped to the state capital to see the woman. His friendship with the woman has occasioned familial discord. Yet that failed to stop him. The Sahib has two fads for which he can pick a fight with anyone. The Sahib sometimes calls his female friend to Delhi, but keeping her in a hotel has become a costly affair. Now, the Sahib has taken a house on rent in Bhopal, that there may not be any problem in his way to see her.

Down in the dumps

A senior IAS officer who remains in the mainstream administration feels neglected these days. Most of the officers have been given some duty to deal with the coronavirus, but this Sahib has not been assigned any important work. Last year, when the virus hit the state he had many important assignments. He remained busy then. He expected that he would be consulted, after the second wave had raged through the state, but that did not happen. So he is disappointed. The work of the department where the Sahib is posted is moving at a snail's pace. The funds sanctioned for the department have also been stopped, so he is facing a lot of problems. As he has no work, he either goes to Delhi or remains in Bhopal. The Sahib wants to shift to Delhi on deputation, but his efforts have so far fallen through. He is so disappointed that he is at his wit's end.

Politician's anger

An important politician of the ruling party is angry with a principal secretary. The politician wants to remove the principal secretary from the department where he is posted. The politician has already told the higher-ups in the government to do that. The Sahib has held back many important cases recommended by the politician whose annoyance is deepening with each passing day. The principal secretary is known for his defiant, as well as ornery attitude. He does not care two hoots about the recommendations of politicians. The minister who is heading the department is close to the politician. Against this backdrop, the minister wants to remove the principal secretary. The Sahib and the minister are not on good terms. Other officials of the department are also not happy with the principal secretary. He delays any file sent to him. Therefore, the anger of many influential people against him is deepening. It will be seen whether the Sahib remains in the department in coming days, after an administrative reshuffle.

Officers' dilemma

Many officials are angry with two IAS officers of a department. The department is important as far as its future is concerned. The officials in the department are not happy with their behaviour. One of them has language problem. As he does not know Hindi well, he cannot understand the reasons behind certain problems. It causes a lot of difficulties. Not only that, many people do not like his way of talking. Instead of solving any problem, the officer makes it trickier by referring to the rule book. His way of working may not let the Sahib stay in the department for long time. An officer junior to him is also sailing on the same boat. He is too junior to handle the assignments given to him. The problem with this officer is that his ego is coming in the way of his working. It is not good for the department.

Highly depressed

Many officers in the districts are in a bad state. The situation has come to such a pass that a collector of a district has gone into depression. The collector says he wants a magic wand to wipe out the coronavirus from the district. The higher-ups in the government have recently appreciated the work of the district administration. The Sahib has been very happy, after that. In the meantime, the Sahib got a dressing-down because of slow progress of vaccination. That saddened him. He says he has never done as much work as he is doing today, but, despite that, the higher-ups are pulling him up. The collector of another district wants to get out of that place by any means. He also craves for getting rid of the collectorship. He went to great lengths to become the collector, but, in the present situation, he wants to leave this post. As well as dealing with the pandemic, he is handling political pressure. Therefore, he is on pins and needles. The Sahib has been trying to go to some other district, but, because of a lack of clout, he is ready to shift to Bhopal.

Asha workers conducting corona survey sans sanitisers & masks

BHOPAL

Around 70,000 health workers including ASHA (Accredited Social Health Activist) and other associated health workers are conducting a corona survey but they have not been given masks or sanitisers, the association of ASHA workers has alleged.

"We are doing 'Kill Corona' survey, door to door in villages across the state but the government hasn't given us masks and sanitisers," said the president of the Asha Usha Sahyogi Sangathan, Vibha Shrivastava.

She said that they had complained to all concerned officials but were given assurance only, and they haven't got masks or sanitisers so far. Most of the Asha workers engaged in this exercise are using their dupattas to cover their face.

The overall process of conducting the 'Kill Corona' survey is also being questioned by the health workers on ground. "We are completely dependent on the answers given to us by the respondent. People are hiding the symptoms for fear of being admitted in ill-equipped hospitals," added Shrivastava.

In a recent incident in village Munda, gram panchayat Sehore, villagers came together and refused vaccination. They didn't even provide any information to the health workers. As part of the primary team, the Asha workers have a set of questions like if anyone in the family suffering from fever, cold or cough. They have to fill their form and move ahead to complete the target of the day of surveying a set number of people. "They should be equipped with thermal gun and oximeter. They can record the temperature and check the oxygen level that is the basic criteria to check corona pandemic," says Amulya Nidhi, convener of Jan Swasthya Sangathan.
