Jack Ma steps out from the shadows with internal post

CASEY HALL Shanghai, April 10

ALIBABA CO-FOUNDER JACK Ma has penned a lengthy memo to employees that expresses support for the internet giant's restructuring efforts, a rare move from the billionaire after spending the last few years out of the spotlight. Alibaba's Hong Kong-listed shares surged 5% after the post. The post, made in an internal company forum, comes one year after Alibaba announced its decision to split into six units - the biggest shake-up in its 25-year history.

It has had a tumultuous time since then, installing a new CEO, announcing and then abandoning the listings of its cloud and logistics units. At the same time, it has lost ground in e-commerce to low-cost rivals such as PDD Holdings and ByteDance-owned Douyin, the Chinese version of TikTok.

In the post, which was roughly a page long, Ma praised the leadership of CEO Eddie Wu and Chairman Joe Tsai and said the split into six divisions had helped streamline decision-making, making Alibaba more agile and customer-focused. He also said Alibaba had made many mistakes in the past.

"We must not only have the courage to admit and correct yesterday's problems in a timely manner but also make reforms for the future," he said, according to a copy of the post seen by Reuters and verified by a source who had viewed it on Alibaba's intranet.

Boeing crisis of confidence deepens with 787 under scrutiny

SIDDHARTH PHILIP & JULIE JOHNSON April 9

BOEING FACES A deepening crisis of confidence after an engineer at the US planemaker alleged the company took manufacturing shortcuts on its 787 Dreamliner aircraft in order to ease production bottlenecks of its most advanced airliner.

Factory workers wrongly measured and filled gaps that can occur when airframe segments of the 787 are joined together, according to Sam Salehpour, a longtime Boeing employee who made his concerns public on Tuesday. That assembly process could create "significant fatigue" in the composite material of the barrel sections and impair the structural integrity of more than 1,000 of the widebody jets in service, he said.

Salehpour, who according to his attorneys at Katz Banks Kumin in Washington worked on the 787 from 2020 through early 2022, said the issues he described "may dramatically reduce the life of the plane."

Boeing disputes the allegations. "In a mad rush to reduce the backlog of the planes and get them to market, Boeing did not follow its own engineering requirements," the engineer said on a conference call with reporters and his lawyers.

AMID WHISTLEBLOWER ALLEGATIONS

Workers wrongly filled gaps that occur when airframe segments of 787 are held together

The allegations now extend the spotlight to the Dreamliner, a critical source of cash for Boeing

Engineers are completing exhaustive analysis to determine long-term inspection, Boeing said

The claims risk opening another flank at the embattled planemaker, which is already facing intense scrutiny of its manufacturing and quality practices since a fuselage panel blew off a nearly new 737 Max 9 shortly after takeoff on January 5. The allegations now extend the spotlight to the Dreamliner, a critical source of cash for Boeing as 737 output remains muted under close oversight by the US Federal Aviation Administration.

After the allegations were made public, Senator Richard Blumenthal, a Connecticut Democrat, announced that he had asked Boeing's departing CEO Dave Calhoun to appear at an April 17 subcommittee hearing called to examine the planemaker's safety culture. Calhoun last month announced that he's stepping down by the end of the year, part of a wider management shakeup in the wake of the January 5 accident.

Halted Deliveries

"Boeing understands the important oversight responsibilities of the subcommittee and we are cooperating with this inquiry," the company said, when asked if Calhoun or other executives planned to testify. "We have offered to provide documents, testimony and technical briefings, and are in discussions with the subcommittee regarding next steps."

In separate statements, Boeing disputed Salehpour's account. The company noted it had halted 787 deliveries for nearly two years earlier this decade under close FAA supervision after it found a spate of tiny structural imperfections in the joints where the carbon-fiber barrel sections are bolted together.

"These claims about the structural integrity of the 787 are inaccurate and do not represent the comprehensive work Boeing has done to ensure the quality and long-term safety of the aircraft," the planemaker said in a statement responding to the allegations, which were reported earlier Tuesday by the New York Times.

Company engineers are "completing exhaustive analysis to determine any long-term inspection and maintenance required, with oversight from the FAA," Boeing said. —BLOOMBERG

WE ARE IN POSITIVE CASH FLOW, SAYS SPACEX CFO

Musk's undisclosed Starlink costs cut lucrative claims

KIEL PORTER, LOREN GRUSH & EDWARD LUDLOW April 10

SPACEX'S PRIZED STARLINK satellite business is still burning through more cash than it brings in. People familiar with the finances of one of the world's most valuable private companies say Starlink has — at times — lost hundreds of dollars on each of the millions of ground terminals it ships, casting doubt on claims by CEO Elon Musk and the company's top brass that the business is in "profitable territory."

Starlink, which provides space-based internet service to more than 2.6 million customers, often strips out the hefty cost of sending its satellites into space to make the non-public numbers look better to investors, these people said, asking not to be identified discussing private information. They describe the company's accounting as "more of an art than a science" and say it's not actually profitable based on an operational and ongoing basis.

Closely held companies don't have to publicly release their financials and often massage their numbers while fundraising.

Many operate for years by subsisting on financing while burning through cash. But people with knowledge of Starlink's balance sheet say money-making quarters have been less consistent than Musk suggested to investors when he celebrated having achieved "breakeven cash flow" in a post last year on his social media platform, X.

When pressed further about Musk's comments at a Washington conference last month, SpaceX CFO Bret Johnsens said, "I don't know that I want to quantify those numbers, but we are in positive cash flow and profitable territory for our satellite business now."

Much as Musk's electric car manufacturer, Tesla, upended the global auto industry, SpaceX is remaking the market for rockets and satellites. It has slashed rocket launch costs with its reusable boosters — largely made in-house. And with Starlink now accounting for a majority of all active satellites around the world, the firm's global profile is rising.
