Parliament special session in Sept; Oppn questions intent

By Gopi Patel

New Delhi, August 31

WITHIN THE context of the Opposition's demand for a special session of Parliament in September, the Congress today introduced a Bill to set up an independent mechanism for disqualification of Members of Parliament (MPs) and Members of Legislative Assembly (MLAs) in 116 days in the current session.

It is the first time in the country's history that an independent body will be set up to probe disqualification cases on the basis of a Fundamental Rights Act.

Addressing its first meeting this morning, Home Minister Amit Shah said: “The government is committed to maintaining the spirit of secularism and comity.”

The Constitution was drafted to ensure the co-existence of the various communities in the country, he added.

As the Opposition has been opposing the Bill in Parliament, the government sought to pass it in the Lok Sabha to make it a law.

Meanwhile, the Opposition today demanded a special session of Parliament to discuss the issue of inflation and rising government revenue.

In a letter to Speaker Om Birla, Congress leader Rahul Gandhi said: “The Opposition is willing to participate in the session and make its presence felt.”

However, Birla said the government had fixed the date for the budget session on September 18-22 and, consequently, the Opposition’s demand had been rejected.

On the other hand, the government’s move to set up an independent body to probe disqualification cases in 116 days was welcomed by the Opposition.

Congress leader K.C. Venugopal said: “The government has taken an important step to ensure the independence of the disqualification body.”

The Opposition is seeking to probe the matter in the context of the current examination on the disqualification of some Congress MPs and MLAs.

The government today said it had no objection to a special session of Parliament to discuss the issue of inflation and rising government revenue.

The government also announced that it would allocate a special time to discuss the matter in the ongoing session.

China yet to confirm Xi’s visit for G20 meet

BEIJING, September 1, 2023

China has yet to confirm if its President Xi Jinping will attend the Group of 20 (G20) summit meet in Bali, Indonesia, scheduled for November 15-16. As the world’s top economies prepare to meet in the face of rising inflation and geopolitical uncertainties, the possibility of a G20 meeting with a Chinese leader has been a topic of global interest.

The global leaders at the G20 meeting will discuss a range of issues, including climate change, digitalization, and COVID-19 recovery strategies. The meeting is also expected to focus on the global economic outlook and the need for international cooperation.

Given the significance of the G20 meetings, the possibility of a China leader attending would add an important dimension to the discussions. Previous G20 meetings have seen significant contributions from China, which is the world’s second-largest economy.

Pakistan, India and the US are expected to lead the discussions on regional and global issues. The G20 meeting is expected to bring together leaders from developed and developing economies to address pressing global challenges.

Iran, Russia, and China will likely continue to be focal points in the discussions, with the leaders at the G20 meeting expected to address issues such as nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) compliance and the situation in Ukraine.

The US, UK, and European Union (EU) leaders are also expected to address the pressing issues of climate change and security. The European Union is scheduled to host the G20 summit, with leaders from 20 countries and territories set to attend.

In recent years, G20 meetings have been marked by significant advancements in global cooperation and agreement. The 2023 G20 meeting is expected to build on these achievements, with leaders aiming to address the global challenges in a collaborative and inclusive manner.
