Family-owned companies worldwide may have weathered the Covid-19 pandemic better than non-family-owned companies, according to a research report by Credit Suisse. The report found that family-owned companies outperformed non-family-owned companies by about 3 percent during this period.

The report, which covers the period from March 2020 to March 2021, examined the performance of 1,000 family-owned companies and 2,000 non-family-owned companies globally. The study found that family-owned companies outperformed non-family-owned companies by about 3 percent during this period.

The report also found that family-owned companies outperformed non-family-owned companies in terms of revenue growth, profitability, and cash flow returns. Revenue growth among family-owned companies was higher than that of non-family-owned companies. This also translated to better ROE and ROA, which were 5.1 percent and 2.5 percent, respectively, for family-owned companies, compared to 4.7 percent and 2.0 percent for non-family-owned companies.

The report further found that family-owned companies have a more gender-diverse structure and cash flow returns. Revenue growth among family-owned companies was higher than that of non-family-owned companies. This also translated to better ROE and ROA, which were 5.1 percent and 2.5 percent, respectively, for family-owned companies, compared to 4.7 percent and 2.0 percent for non-family-owned companies.

According to the report, family-owned companies have a better understanding of their customers and are more flexible in their decision-making process. They are also more likely to reinvest profits in the business, which helps in growing the company over the long term.

The report concludes that family-owned companies have a competitive advantage over non-family-owned companies in the current business environment. They are better equipped to withstand economic shocks and are more likely to emerge stronger from the pandemic.
