Choosing an equity savings fund? Check its net equity exposure

Many conservative investors may choose an equity savings fund which provides a risk-averse strategy with a net safety margin, providing stability and security in their investment portfolios.

How to choose?

A conservative investor may choose an equity savings fund that provides a lower risk profile and a net safety margin. Here are some factors to consider when choosing an equity savings fund:

1. Risk profile: Choose a fund that aligns with your risk tolerance. Conservative investors may prefer funds with a lower risk profile.
2. Net safety margin: Select a fund that offers a net safety margin to minimize your exposure to potential losses.
3. Performance history: Evaluate the fund's performance history to ensure it aligns with your investment goals and risk appetite.
4. Diversification: Look for funds that offer diversification across different asset classes, which can help mitigate risk and enhance stability.
5. Fees and expenses: Choose a fund with lower fees and expenses, as they can significantly impact your returns over time.

Fees and expenses

Conservative investors may want to choose an equity savings fund with lower fees and expenses to minimize their overall cost and better align with their risk profile.

Top 10 companies by equity m-cap

This list provides a snapshot of the top 10 companies by equity market capitalization, reflecting their significant market presence and financial performance.

Financial Times Stock Exchange (FTSE) has outperformed emerging markets in 14, years and developed markets in 14, years. Foreign investors view it as a large, liquid, domestic market with superior long-term growth outlook, the report said.

The note adds that foreign investors have been mostly buying past the past five years. However, they tend to sell at the time of the short-term selloff.

On the other hand, domestic investors have gradually emerged as more significant market participants over the past 20 years, with overall 2.5 per cent of the market capitalization held by domestic investors, which is more than double that of foreign investors.
