AI has put the spotlight on publicity rights, especially in creative fields. But what if you are not famous yet?

There is no particular legislation that protects such rights, other statutes offer some protection. Here’s a quick summary why:

In the case of deceased actors

Any contracts particular legislation or statutes related to publicity rights, should be taken into consideration to determine infringement of publicity rights. The courts have identified with their unique characteristics. The courts have the power to determine the importance of publicity rights, which the deceased actor holds. Publicity rights of deceased actor (referred to as ‘personality rights’) of deceased actor are enforceable right in the identity or persona of deceased actor. The courts have to determine the importance of these rights. They are not unenforceable under Section 23 of the Copyright Act, 1957.

In the case of living actors

For this, the terms of the contract entered into by the living actor should be taken into consideration. The courts have determined the importance of publicity rights. The courts have to determine the importance of these rights. They are not unenforceable under Section 23 of the Copyright Act, 1957.

It is being eerily replicated in real life. It is already an issue in Hollywood. It is being on the minds of creative voices in the AI space.

In the case of Indian artists

The courts have determined the importance of publicity rights. The courts have identified with their unique characteristics. The courts have held that the likelihood of confusion was not one-sided and unconscionable. They would also not waive them. The courts have determined the importance of these rights. They are not unenforceable under Section 23 of the Copyright Act, 1957.
